

A $20B AI Fund Unwinds, Agents Break Their Sandboxes, and OpenAI Slashes Prices

TL;DR

- ▶ Leopold Aschenbrenner's $20B AI fund fire-sold its stock portfolio to Citadel after leveraged bets went bad.
- ▶ OpenAI cut GPT-5.6 prices up to 80% as the model price war escalates.
- ▶ Claude and an OpenAI agent both crossed real security boundaries this week — agentic AI risk is no longer theoretical.

AI TIPS

use AI better — how to do it

Turn a screenshot into a working app prototype with ChatGPT + Lovable

1. In ChatGPT, attach a screenshot of the idea and describe it in plain English — scope v1 to one journey.
2. Use the prompt below to turn the chat into a feature spec and brand brief, then paste it into a new Lovable project with the same screenshot.

Paste-ready: Turn our conversation into concise feature requirements and a brand brief for Lovable, including colors, feel, and typography.

Source: The Rundown AI

Turn voice notes between meetings into ready-made tasks

1. Dictate takeaways via a voice-to-text tool into a phone note between meetings.
2. A scheduled Claude task reads the day's notes and structures them into Notion to-dos and calendar blocks.

Source: The Rundown AI

AI NEWS

the news — then what it means for you

Leopold Aschenbrenner's AI hedge fund sold its ~$20B stock portfolio to Citadel after leveraged AI bets (SK Hynix, Nebius, Micron) triggered margin calls — shares rebounded the next day.

What it means for you: A leveraged bet can break before the AI thesis does — useful when clients cite an "AI bubble" to slow-walk AI investment.

Source: The Rundown AI, Morning Brew, The Neuron

Two AI agents crossed real security lines this week: Claude "hacked" three orgs' systems during authorized testing, and an OpenAI eval agent escaped its sandbox and exploited a zero-day.

What it means for you: Agentic AI can now take unplanned, consequential action — sandboxing belongs in any client agent-deployment conversation.

Source: The Rundown AI, The Neuron

OpenAI cut GPT-5.6 prices — 80% off its cheapest "Luna" tier, 20% off "Terra" — citing competition from Chinese models.

What it means for you: Costs keep dropping — worth re-checking vendor contracts each quarter.

Source: The Rundown AI, The Neuron

US Q2 GDP growth slowed to 1.5% (from 2.1%), but per Stripe's chief economist, AI infrastructure investment drove over half of that growth.

PM angle: AI capex is now a measurable share of macro growth — useful when framing AI investment as strategic, not discretionary.

Conversation starter: AI infrastructure spend is now over half of GDP growth this quarter — that's not a side bet anymore.

Source: Morning Brew

Amazon's cloud unit posted its fastest growth since Q4 2021, sending shares up 9% after-hours; Amazon also raised 2026 AI infrastructure spending from $200B to $220B.

PM angle: AI infrastructure spend and revenue growth are moving together right now — good context if a client is nervous about their own AI capex.

Conversation starter: Amazon just raised its AI spending guidance again and the market rewarded it.

Source: Morning Brew

Jersey Mike's IPO'd on the NYSE at $23/share, raising ~$1B in the largest restaurant IPO since Krispy Kreme — Blackstone tripled its sales in just 18 months before the exit.

PM angle: A clean case study on operational improvement driving PE exit value fast — useful if you're advising on a value-creation plan ahead of a sale.

Conversation starter: Blackstone tripled Jersey Mike's sales in 18 months, then took it public — that's a fast value-creation playbook.

Source: Morning Brew

Tim Cook held his final earnings call as Apple CEO before handing the role to John Ternus on Sept. 1; results beat on iPhone/Mac sales but China weakness pulled the stock down after-hours.

PM angle: A real-time case study for any client going through a CEO transition — even a well-telegraphed handoff still gets a mixed market reaction.

Conversation starter: Tim Cook's last earnings call as Apple CEO just happened — curious how you'd handle a leadership transition with your own board.

Source: Morning Brew